CIA secrecy doubted

CIA Director Stansfield Turner said Wednesday a foreign country recently rejected a covert action plan because it did not believe the CIA could keep the operation secret. Turner declined to identify the nation involved. But he indicated the plan, proposed by the CIA, "would have been of great benefit to both countries." He said the nation turned it down "when reminded that I must notify eight committees of the Congress of any covert action," Turner said. "They simply did not believe that we could keep that secret."
